- You shall constantly seek different religious sects.
- You shall constantly change the way you think.
- You shall adopt ever more systems, and stick to the one which seems stronger to you.

But, if you have no base, if you do not research and seek understanding, you will always be part of contradictions which do not belong to you, and seeking a transitory balance, based upon the unfathomable, and that shall last until new ideas arise that will simplify the complex models of the religious (and scientific) theories. Such transformation happens to any research. See the story of the supposition of the Atomic Model.

All it takes is one small, careless mistake, and the whole study will develop erroneously, with a tendency to grow ever more complicated, up to a point no one will comprehend it. Then, you will be proud of being the only one to understand a “fantasy”.

- defend yourself in any way you can against “narrow-mindedness”, as the truth in alliance with logic will come to you. Evading them will only delay your encounter, accept them and research them.

We are still crawling, and the fields ahead are infinite.

Your opinion and your ideas have a place to fit in, and they are important. To judge your ideas and as foolish is no more than the depreciation of your own “SELF”. And remember that most wise men died unaware of their discovery...

During the formation of the Universe, the ‘Transmutation of Energy into Matter’, has brought the need to create forces and “derivate Laws”.

Matter then became a derivate of energy, and therefore, its container.

This system was already ruled by the ‘Dynamic Laws’, bringing within them the force of “Life”. Its manifestation required special care, and it was necessary to spend an incalculable amount of time to achieve a combination between the elements capable of structuring a life form.

The technique that was used in principle was: Rehearse, Error and Dissociation...
